With Sports in American History: From Colonization to Globalization, Gerald Gems, Linda Borish, and Gertrud Pfister attempt to provide "a comprehensive, new approach to examining underexplored issues and groups in American sport history" (p. v). By heeding Catriona Parratt's 1998 call to embrace the cultural "turn" toward agency, Gems, Borish, and Pfister seek to create a more inclusive and multi-perspective text(book) of American sport history in contrast to texts that have been by and ...

Consistent with this conceptualization of sport, this article provides an historical overview of the experiences of blacks in American sports. Beginning with the slavery era of American history, the article demonstrates that African American's experiences in sports have largely paralleled their experiences in the broader dimensions of American society.
